

Updates from the Journey of Muzz

Day 10

Muzz was back on board today - said he loved the company (on Osprey) & perhaps the crew weren't as bad as he had thought.....

We left about 9am this morning and passed many interesting sections.

Perhaps due to Muzz being back on board ...hmmmmm maybe not - we went through very smoothly and stopped for lunch at the junction of the Wakool & Murray Rivers. Along the way we passed many pumps and it shows to us the need for the basin plan.

Yes, we need to have a healthy river but we also need food & employment - so a healthy balance needs to be achieved. The balance is, I believe, what the Basin Plan is all about - based on factual information from metered pumps, managing our economy & environment.

Muzz is again nowhere to be found, so we put Captain Chips on the trail.....
